

Man Wisdom (sorta)

Real questions from real women.
Real answers
from real men.
Real scary.

Why will a guy wait for me after class and follow me home after I told him “no” 4 months ago?

If you told him “no” four months ago but smiled at him three months ago then you have to tell him “no” all over again. We’re like puppies—be firm and don’t send mixed signals.

Oh ... I thought you said “yo.”

He’s just not willing to give up on this relationship yet!

Why do guys think bad pickup lines are a good idea?

Women should be thankful for bad pickup lines. Bad pickup lines delivered seriously are an immediate indication that a guy should be ignored. Bad pickup lines delivered ironically, however, are a sign that a guy has a sense of humor and give the woman an escape route from the attempted pickup. If she’s interested, she can play along. If not, she just ignores him like any other guy that lays a bad pickup line on her.

Give us a list of good pick-up lines. We’ll use those!

Why is it okay for men to watch hours and hours of shows analyzing sports (not the games themselves), but when women watch Oprah, we are “wasting our time with that crap”?

Sports shows inform about stats, players, injuries—facts and opinions. Oprah includes a lot of feelings, relationship analysis and emotions, which then influence your relationships, sometimes causing unnecessary analysis and problems. When was the last time you got in an argument because Steven Jackson didn’t break up the middle on 3rd and 2?

Sports are more exciting, and potentially historic. Years from now, would you be more likely to turn to somebody and say, “I was watching when Boise State ran the Statue of Liberty play to beat Oklahoma!” or “I remember this one time when Oprah really connected with a guest and got them to open up”?

Why, even when the task is simplified by a laundry chute, can men not find a laundry basket with their dirty laundry?

Women see laundry in black and white terms, as in clean vs. dirty. Men utilize a more complex continuum grading system in which quasi-clean clothes qualify to be worn on occasions such as class and lounging. The floor and surrounding furniture provide the most convenient venue for these clothes to be optimally accessed and worn.

Try putting a backboard, rim and net above the laundry basket. Not only will your man put away his own dirty laundry, he’ll put yours away too. Plus, he’ll improve his free-throw percentage. It’s a win-win situation.

Why do some men say they want to marry you on the 2nd date, then stop calling after the 5th?

The marriage line is to entice you to have sex. If it hasn’t happened by date five, then why don’t we just agree that this relationship isn’t really going to work?

Wait until the 12th date—then he’ll want to marry you again. But you should definitely find a way out of the 17th date. That’s when he’ll tell you he’s lusting after your best friend.

For more free Man Wisdom, or to print your own copy, visit <http://thestateoftheunion.com/>